iCloud: On both phones, go to Settings > [Your name] > iCloud. Slide Contacts to On position. If opted, merge contacts to avoid losing any.Backup: On old phone, turn on iCloud Backup. Choose Back Up Now. On new phone, go to Apps & Data > Restore from iCloud Backup.iTunes: Connect old phone to computer/iTunes. Go to Backups > This Computer > Back Up Now. On new phone, choose Restore Backup. In this guide, we detail five ways to transfer contacts between iPhones: via iCloud, an iCloud backup, iTunes, web-based tools, and third-party software. Instructions in this article apply to iPhones with iOS 9 and up. The easiest methods to transfer contacts use features that come with the iPhone, such as iCloud. Since iCloud can keep data synchronized across all your devices, using it to sync contacts from iPhone to iPhone makes it an easy choice. Ensure that both iPhones are signed in with the same Apple ID and are connected to Wi-Fi. On both phones, open Settings, tap your name, then tap iCloud. Move the Contacts slider to on/green. This step will upload your contacts to iCloud if they're not already there. If lots of contacts need to be backed up, it might take a while to finish. If a message appears about merging the contacts, choose that option so that none of the contacts are deleted. Because data from both phones first uploads to iCloud and then syncs to both phones, you have to sync all of your contacts to both devices. Alex Dos Diaz / Lifewire Beyond the contact syncing process from the last section, iCloud can also make a backup of the data on your iPhone and then restore that backup onto a different iPhone. Here's how: Connect the iPhone to Wi-Fi. Backing up to iCloud requires lots of data. Use Wi-Fi instead of the cellular data included with your phone plan. On the iPhone with the contacts on it, tap Settings > [your name]. If prompted, log in with your Apple ID. Older devices may not display your name on this screen. Tap iCloud > iCloud Backup. Move the iCloud Backup slider to on/green, then select Back Up Now. If you see a message about your iPhone no longer backing up to your computer automatically when you sync with iTunes, tap OK. The iPhone uploads your contacts and other data to iCloud. This backs up the entire iPhone, so it will take a while. On the new phone you want to have the iCloud backup added to, follow the standard new iPhone setup procedure. On the Apps & Data screen, choose Restore from iCloud Backup and follow the prompts to finish restoring the iPhone backup and copy your old contacts to the new phone. If your new iPhone has already been set up, restore the backup data onto it by erasing the content and settings and choosing to restore from an iCloud backup when prompted. If you prefer to back up your iPhone to a computer, use iTunes instead of iCloud. Here's what to do: Connect the old iPhone to the computer you normally sync it with. Open iTunes and access the screen that shows your iPhone. If it doesn't open automatically, click the Phone icon. In the Backups section, click This Computer, then click Back Up Now. If you're asked about encrypting the backup to make your iPhone more secure, either do so with the Encrypt Backups button. You can decline by selecting Don't Encrypt. You can change this setting later. Wait while the iPhone backs up to the computer. To monitor the progress, watch the blue progress bar at the top of iTunes. When the backup is complete, eject the old iPhone and plug in the new one. To restore the new iPhone from the backup, select Restore Backup and follow the prompts. If iTunes explains that you have to first disable Find My iPhone in order to restore the backup, do so through the iCloud > Find My iPhone option in the Settings app. iCloud isn't the only cloud-based service that stores and syncs contacts. Google and Yahoo are two other examples. There's a robust world of third-party software that transfer contacts, usually rather quickly since they don't deal with iTunes or iCloud. My Contacts Backups is one example of a contact list backup app that works by having you email the contact list to yourself so that you can copy the contacts to your new iPhone. Just open your mail on the new phone, select the attachment, and import the list. If you've used other phones that can transfer contacts from the SIM card, you might be wondering if you can do the same on your iPhone. This method backs up contacts to the SIM card and then you move the old SIM to the new phone to use the backup. It's not so simple for the iPhone because the feature isn't supported with the iPhone SIM card. Learn more in How to Back Up Contacts to iPhone SIM. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why! Ringya, a clever and useful contact-management app for iPhones, is now available for Android devices. It’s free. It does something very cool. And you’re going to want to try it. iOS and Android have no shortage of apps that manage contacts, allow group texting, and/or provide contextual caller ID. Ringya does all of these. But here’s what impresses me: Ringya can take a photo of a printed contact list and import the names and numbers into a new “Ring” (or group) within the app. You just take a picture, wait a few minutes for Ringya servers to process the image and convert it into contact entries, and it appears within the app. The first time I tried it on my Samsung Galaxy Note, the conversion failed. But I tried again on that phone as well as on my iPhone 5 and it worked beautifully on both. The printed list of contacts I threw at Ringya wasn’t perfect, either. The font size was small, and the piece of paper had been folded in several places. A spot check of the contacts the app captured showed complete accuracy. In reality, you probably won’t have that many printed phone lists to import. Ringya also imports contacts from your phone’s address book or a Word or Excel document. You can enter contacts manually, too. The service isn’t designed for importing business cards, however. Another downside: You can’t choose to import your Ringya contacts into your phone’s address book. As the app’s help section confusingly states: “Ringya places your contact lists in Rings within the application and keeps some contact information in your address book, not as normal contacts; that is, you will most likely not see them at all although they are there.” Come again? Once you’ve set up a Ring, you can send group texts or emails or call individuals within a group. When someone from one of your Rings calls you, you see some information on them, such as the Ring you’ve added them to. If you share that Ring with the others in it and they later change their contact information Ringya updates their information on your device accordingly. In fact, Ringya will update that contact info for everyone within the Ring, as long as they use the Ringya app. Ringya has some room for improvement. But if the developers stick with it and add a little more functionality, it could be a killer contact-management app. Switching to an iPhone from Android might seem like a daunting process. You probably have a deep contact list that has been curated over the years. Thankfully, it’s pretty easy to transfer your contacts to an iPhone. Option 1: During the Initial Setup Process Apple has an official “Move to iOS” app that’s available in the Google Play Store for Android devices. This is a great tool, but it only works while setting up a new iPhone. If your iPhone hasn’t been set up yet, download the app on your Android device and follow the instructions to transfer contacts. Apple There are still a few options to transfer contacts if you’ve already gotten past the initial iPhone setup process. RELATED: How to Switch From Android to iPhone Option 2: Import Your Google Contacts If the contacts on your Android phone are backed up to your Google account, we can transfer them to your iPhone easily. First, open the Settings app on your iPhone. Scroll down to “Contacts.” Next, select “Accounts.” If you didn’t add your Google account here already, tap “Add Account.” (If you have added it, tap the name of your Google account.) Now, we can select “Google” from the list of services. Follow the steps to sign in to the same Google account that you used on your Android device. After you’re signed in, you’ll be brought to a screen with a few options for things to sync. Make sure that “Contacts” is toggled on and tap “Save.” That’s all there is to it for Google contacts. You’ll see all of your contacts appear in the iPhone “Contacts” app right away. Option 3: Export and Import a File Not everyone has their contacts synced up to a service. The best solution, in this case, is to export your contacts from Android and import them onto your iPhone. This process will look slightly different depending on your Android device. For example, we’ll use Google’s Contacts app for Android. Open the app on your Android device and tap the hamburger menu in the top-left corner. Select “Settings” from the menu. Scroll down to the “Manage Contacts” section and select “Export.” You’ll be brought to a file manager, and you can select where you want to save the .vcf file. Tap “Save” when you’re done. Now, you need to get that .vcf file onto your iPhone somehow. You can email it to yourself, upload it to a cloud storage service such as Google Drive, or send it over Bluetooth. Do whatever you’re comfortable with. After you get it onto your iPhone, open the .vcf file once it’s there. When it asks which app you’d like to open the file in, select “Contacts.” Now, you can select the contacts individually to create new contacts or merge with existing contacts. To transfer them all, tap “Add All # Contacts” at the top. Select “Add All # Contacts” to confirm your decision. That’s all there is to it. Your contacts will now be moved over to your iPhone, and you can put your Android device in a drawer and forget about it. Or, you could turn it into something useful.
